OOPS!

By now, I'm sure that all of the cadets heard about a shakeup within the DODO operation. As matter of fact, the situation got so sensitive we're not really supposed to talk about it at all. But I'm going to talk about it anyway, even though this page (or portions of it) might get cut out and not even make it to the printers. I feel that I should say something because: (1) Everybody heard about it, and why pretend that the problem never existed? People will keep talking about it until someone clears <sup>up the story</sup> ~~about it~~... (2) We all can learn something from what we went through, and hope it doesn't happen again, and (3) an apology is ultimately in order.

But first, here's how it all began. In the past editions of the DODO, we printed certain items that were considered sexist. The most typical example was the bathroom article in the last issue, if you haven't heard about it by now. The complaint wasn't against the issue of more female latrines, but against the underlying tone of <sup>the</sup> article, which was sexist.

Just as women would not like offending remarks <sup>to</sup> be made about them simply because they are female, I would not like offending remarks made about Asians simply because I am one of those "slanty-eyed, short guys who should be laying railroad tracks or running a dry-cleaning business." No, I would not like that at all. Neither would blacks, Hispanics, Indians, Jews, Moslems, Honor Guard, or football players. In short, I agree with all the women who were offended.

Now, you may ask, why didn't those DODO people figure that out in the first place? I don't know. But hey, we are supposed to learn <sup>things</sup> at this place. Lt. Col. Lorenz said that "this was our own little shoebox to experiment within." Our own experiment blew up on us. But we survived. Now we know what mixes right and what mixes wrong. With everyone's feedback and support, we won't repeat the same mistake again.

And now, I would like to make a formal apology to those whom we stirred anger within:

SORRY!

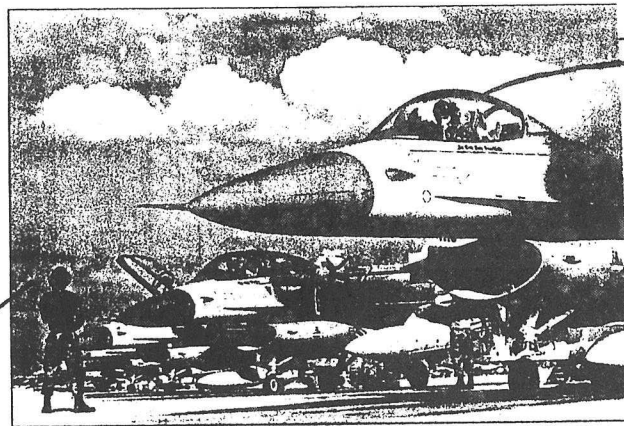

Please forgive us, we're not all perfect.

"I hope this doesn't happen again, Mr. Tung."

1. It has been observed that Fourth Class cadets have been too narrowly trained, which is a detriment in view of the Academy's goal of producing well-rounded individuals. Fourthclassmen are only taught to learn about Air Force and adversary aircraft only, while ignoring professions and specialties that are not related to flying.

2. Therefore, to widen the scope of Fourth Class training, Terrazzo ID shilouettes have been developed to familiarize our cadets with the construction business. These ID's should be easy to learn--if anyone has trouble, all he/she has to do is look out a window facing the Terrazzo.
