Once again I have to ask the question, Where do I begin? Well, given that I'm writing this on a Thursday, which happens to be Second Group's morning marching practice day, I think I'll start there: Morning Marching Practice. I think that this place needs a serious dose of Logic training. Why? Well, let's take a look at the thought process behind this policy and see which pieces don't quite fit:

1. Cadets don't like to march.
2. Cadets march a lot.
3. Cadets think they march too much.
4. Given 1-4, then hypothesis:
5. Cadets march poorly.

Solution: (Real World, if you can call this place that)

6. Cadets will march more to get better.

Now, am I supposed to believe that we don't get ENOUGH marching practice?? Let's see, there was BCT, all marching, Four degree year, drill competitions, and not to mention parades, formations twice a day and march ons for the last three years. So, I don't march well? Could it be, now this may be hard to believe that a cadet has come up with a feasible solution so take it with a grain of salt, but could it be that we're tired of marching, and hence march poorly? No, of course not says CW, you're just lazy and need discipline!! Okay, so there I was, carrying my wicked rubber rifle at 0700, freezing [REDACTED] while I relearned how to march. And what a difference it made!! I can really FEEL the difference!!

And then there's our Squad Comms, who remind us that it could have been worse. We could have been marching on Saturday's to practice. Okay, another bad idea. Here's a hint: even a bad alternative DOESN'T MAKE THIS CHOICE ANY BETTER!!! Now, how about this idea?? We march less, like never in the mornings. We place more emphasis on noon meal formation and if we slip up there or in parades, then squadrons have to practice during M-5 or something. But, that makes sense, AND solves a problem, so of course it wasn't even considered. And, that's probably why I'm not a squad comm- my solutions make a little more sense. Oh well, all this probably for nothing, after all, I'm a cadet and nobody listens to us.... And hey, marching prepares us for battle...

Yeah, whatever.

Academy wing wins quality award: The Air Force Academy's 34th Training Wing is one of only six service teams to receive the 1995 Chief of Staff Team Quality Award.

The unit, which competed against 20 others across the Air Force, won with its plan to streamline the process of cadet expulsions. By cutting out excess steps in the process, the unit saved 131 work days per case and reduced the total time they spend processing expulsions by 79 percent.

Their work began in June 1994, when the academy asked for a review of the process. Academy officials said the goal was to streamline the operation without interfering with due process and making it more compatible with Air Force discharge policies.

You listen to Led Zeppelin

You thought that one of the women in Playboy's college issue would go to the Ring Dance with you.

You tried to get one of them to go to the Ring Dance.

You believe that the Ring Dance is the number two social event in the nation.

You think the world owes you one for putting up with this place.

You think you're God's gift to women. [REDACTED]

You've ever taken a Dodo joke to be a personal attack.

You take this seriously.

You want to ask out that psuedo squid. (Does this drive you nuts? Which one am I talking about???)

You can't pass a mirror without looking into it and thinking, "[REDACTED] Wow, how 'bout that?"

You think life [REDACTED] stinks.

OFFICIAL**

The cadet armory at the United States Air Force Academy is for cadets to check their personal weapons in since they can't be kept in the dorm rooms and shouldn't be kept at sponsor's houses. The armory is open the weekend if an appointment was not made, but you can try the on-call armorer for entry (just call the TWOC).

FOR EMERGENCIES: contact the Operations Center (x2910) to get in contact with the on-call armorer so you may check a gun out.
