EDITOR'S

PAYGE

Well, here's the second issue you've all waited so desperately for.

Big deal.

Many of you have come up to me and told me how much you like the stuff we print, how it is so relevant to the real attitude of the Wing, and how funny it is.

Like I care what you think.

Actually, what I care most about right now is ME. I don't think most of you understand what I am: I am the DODO Commander. I should be on Wing Staff. Hell, I should have one those suites reserved for the Honor Dudes. Yeah. Me and the D&B Commander. USAFA's vital elite. Stop laughing.

Hey, the next time someone comes up to me, and they want to tell me something about the Wing, tell me this: what's all this bull about making this place more like the "real Air Force"? That's all I hear about, it seems. Personally, if wanted to be in the real Air Force, I figure my would be in Monatana pulling weeds out of the cracks in runways, not at the High Altitude Leadership Seminar. If Congress discovers they're shelling out a quarter mil for "real" Air Force personnel, they'll spawn larvae. All of them. Even the heterosexuals.

So somebody pull their head out and find Lackland on the map: it's not close to Colorado. Colorado is the rectangular state. OK?

Another thing people address to me is questions. Stop it. I'm not going to tell you "what I do". Because I want to keep this job; and if the guys on my staff ever figure out that they do all the work and I just write these editorials, I'm SOL. So nobody read this article to any of them. Even if they ask.

I want to take the (immensely valuable) space to thank the officers in our chain who patiently assisted this editor in his quest for humor: The Soup, The Comm, The Deen, and The DaackAttack all gave up their (immensely available) time to meet with me. Thanks.

And I want to put one thing to rest: this silly Soviet thing. It's blatantly obvious what happened; I've been saying it all along. Gorby set the whole manacial thing up. You can tell he was pulling the strings; the May Day in August Parade sounds like Clancy on bad acid. If anyone is buying the whole plot- Stop it. Right now. The man used to be head of the KGB. He probably planned the damn thing for years as he lay awake in bed at night, trying to figure out where Raisa was. Well it sounds plausible, anyway.

There are too many Top-10 lists this issue. Suck it up. You should be studying, anyway.

WAR STORIES THE AOC WAY

There I was:

Dinks all around. The place was thick with 'em, filling the air all around me with their Form-30s and complaints. A lesser man might have wet his flight suit at the thought, but icewater runs through my veins. I had a job to do.

I gritted my teeth and unleashed a salvo of Form-10s. I thought I could here the screams of the dinks as their weekends evaporated in a cloud of negative paperwork. I almost felt sorry for the little buggers. Almost.

Maybe I was too overconfident. I thought the rank on my shoulders would frighten the punks into trembling submission, but some of 'em were made of sterner stuff. Not the CW guys to be sure; they turned to Jello whenever we threatened to take their parking slot. No, I'm talking about the motley collection of misfits and malcontents who eat Form-10s, CDB's, and MRC's for breakfast and have callouses on their palms where the rifle sits on the weekends; Centurions, the only dinks I fear. Living legends.

Luckily, I never operate alone. Rather than take the elite veterans of the pad on myself, I just pin 'em down long enough for my support to shred 'em. Like any good commander (good? Make that great), I know how to use my resources. I like to soften the dinks up a little first by pounding them via the MPA. If they don't come sprinting out of the trenches eager to kiss butt after that, I call in the big gun: the Social Actions helicopter. Most of 'em are reduced to putty after one brush with this, but some try to stick it out. That's when I give the word for my own elite bunch of gung-ho pencil-necks to start the slaughter; that's right, the Math Dept. I've lost track of the number of dinks crushed beneath the heels of the Documentation Gestapo and the CAS police. The few survivors waste away in Stalag 41, out of sight and out of mind. Good riddance, I say.

The brain boys call this little blitzkrieg the Daack Attack, after the hero of the famed Comm Shop. I just call it poetry in motion.

Oh, I've been rewarded for my dedication. The Bobbit Cross, the 24th Sq. Campaign Medal, the Peraska Ribbon (with 'v' for Vindictive), the Plaque and Sabre; I've got 'em all. I don't do what I do for the medals and glory. I do it to get promoted below the zone. Don't call me a hero, just call me "Sir."

How did the GR go?

Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, right, was treated to a glider ride Thursday morning at the Air Force Academy. He co-piloted the ASK-24 high-performance glider with cadet Rob Dittman. Romer, a former Air Force officer, has been flying planes since he was 17 years old. He was visiting the academy for a briefing on its educational programs and to speak to cadets during lunch. He also paid a courtesy call on Lt. Gen. Homer, the academy's new superintendent.

Joe, because we have so much more responsibility than "them", we feel we deserve the following priveledges:

1. Unlimited ONPs during the week.
2. Pool party once a week (preferably Saturday) at any General officer's house (preferably Gen. Hosmer).
3. "S", "V", and "F" stickers on cars so we can park anywhere & anytime.
4. Own offices in Fairchild Hall (on 6th floor with a window view).
5. Own reserved box @ Falcon Stadium.
6. New China & Silverware for Staff tower.
7. One year free membership to the O-Club.

Well gang, it's Sept. now, and as any non-PQ or NQ firstie should know, time to apply for non-rated career fields. Unfortunately, there are never enough of the good opportunities, like Intell., OSI, or free masters degrees at UCLA. These jobs are highly competitive, and require candidates to interview or go before review boards as part of the competition. Here are some helpful hints on basic interview skills from the Cadet Career Counseling Center:

-BE PREPARED. Over 3% of interviewers say they reject candidates simply because they forgot things like the name of the capital of the ancient Angkor Wat kingdom.

-BE AWARE. Don't sign or agree to anything if the words "missile officer" are involved.

-BE POLITE. If you are going to enjoy a smoke or chew during an interview, bring enough for your interviewer as well.

-BE HONEST. Tact and euphemisms are allowed, of course.

-BE CLEVER. If a forged message can make the other candidates think that interviews have been cancelled or moved to a different room, you've got yourself a job!

-BE ARMED. Nothing impresses an interviewer with your gung-ho spirit as much as a death threat backed up by major firepower.

-BE HALFWAY BUZZING. Don't you think you're more witty after three or four mai-tais?

And finally, as always,

-BE YOURSELF. Or, if you think someone else has a better chance of getting the job, be that person.

DODO TAILS

Walking up from the weight room, I notice a four-degree who is walking slightly ahead of me. Since I take the stairs, and he the ramp, I arrive at the entryway to the gym much closer behind him than before. Much to my amazement, although I am but a pace behind him, he does not reach back to hold the door open as passes through; instead it closes in front of my face. In my post-up workout high, I write it off as another isolated incident of Cadet Rudeness, and think nothing more of it. Until...

Because I had to stop and open the doors, and because I walk like an upperclassman, and he walks like a smack, he is halfway past the tennis courts as I leave the gym. I look ahead to see an officer approach. Suddenly, it occurs to me: He is not going to salute this officer. Indeed, he blows the captain off like so much lint. The officer placidly asked him to stop, and says something under my range of hearing. I approach quickly, but another upperclassman has already entered the conversation. We both agree that the understanding is that you only forego saluting during intramurals on the playing fields. As we salute out, I turn to the cadet who I am now walking beside.

"That doolie is a waste of oxygen," I told him, "When I was a WAD, I was so respectful, I saluted in the shower."

He nodded in agreement, "Better safe than sorry. Someone should tie that worm to the back of a Nissan Pathfinder and drag him up Eagle's Peak."

I returned his nod, "From there he could get perspective on this place, and learn something," I affirmed.

Unfortunately, Cadet Rudeness is not restricted to fourthclassmen; and takes forms much more viscious than ignoring the occasional O-3 Silo Hero.

Try counting fellow cadinks who look down at the Terrazo rather than meet your eye and greet informally. More often than not, I say " you" instead of "Hello". You would be amazed how infrequently anyone notices.

For instance, when I woke early one Saturday this summer to fulfill my serious Comp Group Staff duties, I came across one of my classmates whistling quite loudly in the hall.

I put on a half-grin and said in a low tone, "Hey man, some people are probably trying to sleep."

He looked at me as if I had grabbed his crotch. "Yeah, and I can whistle." Then he resumed, louder. Tunelessly.

The smile left my face. I watched him approach the 'vator door. "I wasn't denying your right to blow wet air through your lips, dork, I was just mentioning that most folks like to sleep past eight on the weekend," I commented.

"Hunh-" he said, or something as intelligible. Then he got in the elevator and left.

Maybe I should have told him that the Sijan elevator was still broken, and the shaft was a three-story drop, but I really wasn't in the mood to.

Stamp out Cadet Rudeness. Kill a cadet.
