VOLUME 37
NUMERO TREES

Yeah, well, ok, whatever-

So how we been doing? Has the Dodo still got its thumb on the Pulse of The Wing? Is it safe to assume that the Wing does not look favorably on carrying Mattel M-16s in parades? Personally, I see a field full of Combat Smurfs with arachnids on their shoulders for next semester. How is it that when CW wants to haze us it's called "realistic training" and when we want to haze wads it's called "rites of passage"?

Hey, you AOCs out there, do something funny, like you used to. Ever since the Deputies got here, you've been acting like you've got a real assignment; those junior captain A-10 drivers are kinda intimidating, aren't they? Really shakes the ol' job security don't it?

We don't have much time left: the election is coming up! Remember, a vote for Slow is a vote for Slow's pilot slot. Elect me now or regret it later!! I am far superior to each of the other candidates: I was never involved in Irangate, I know how to inhale, and my ears don't stick out like air brakes. I must admit, however, I would pick Stockdale for VP also- there's something about having a man who is totally untouchable as your Second that makes press conferences that much simpler. Slow: "No, Mr. Turner, I don't want to answer any of your stupid questions, so take Jane and get the hell out of my White House. Jim, you wanna show them the way to the door?" Stockdale: "Grrrr!"

Hey, I must've fallen asleep for a month or two; somebody wanna tell me when Somalia became our good friend? Or for that matter, our problem? I thought the big peace dividend thing was that we didn't have to galavant around the world cleaning up other peoples' messes. Hey, let's start with West Virginia and work through Detroit until we finish at Watts before we become sort of a World Martec.

And that word: Martec. Why does the Wing hate them so? Tell me, is the first word that leapt to mind "theft"? Because that's a cop-out, man. We had the highest theft rate of Air Force bases even before we contracted with this company; sounds to me like our janitors became our scapegoats. Cadets are funny animals- they complain that the new crews aren't amiable enough. Personally, I could care less whether they say "hi", as long as my urinal is clean. I didn't realize that conversational skills were required for a Sanitation Position... Besides, we're in a Recession, so we can pay four guys to do the job of one, and cut down on unemployment.

If you haven't noticed, '94 just got recognized in October: yes, it's official- I overheard Merrill during his visit, saying to the SPs, "keep those guys away from me...I heard about Flatiron."

Hey, anyone who's got good ideas for my nonrated AFSC, Distro them to me, willya? I've been thinking about Public Affairs, but Personnel just won't bite. They're probably right: "No, Mrs. Smendrick, your son was not injured in that airplane crash, he was kidnapped by aliens and held in ransom until we gave them back Hanger 18. Yes, he was molested with a Ronco Garden Weasel by the aliens, just like the Air Force Times article stated. No, we haven't recovered his philtrum yet.." It just wouldn't be good for America at large, I guess.

This issue is sincerely dedicated to Chappie, because anyone can be the victim of mistaken identity; get good soon, man. — SLOW

AOC

Hey Slow,

04 OCT 92

I have been doing some thinking on this UPT reduction thing and USAFA spending lately. I would go off on how much dry cleaning and the tailor shop rips us off, but I'll save that for a later letter.

Let's see. Okay, how about those great $4,000 dollar Hewlett-Packard printers. (I'll demonstrate my mathematical skills on the bottom). The Academy also decided to spend at least $10 for each of us on those Dear UPT letters we got during the summer, when they could have actually waited to brief us when school started (supposedly they had to do that because of a press leak, nice security we got here in the AF). Then during transition week, I noticed it. I tried so hard, put damn it, they just wouldn't let me take a roll of toilet paper back to my room. Yes, you know what I'm talking about, the new toilet paper dispensers. That must have been at least $15 for each of those things. I'll sleep so much better at night knowing that my toilet paper won't be stolen, I mean borrowed.

I could go on about the terrazzo by Sijan, but hey we know they get paid by the hour. I could also go on about the revamping of Mitch's. I guess it cost so much that we can expect paper plates and plastic utensils until Christmas. Enough said here's the math:

40 printers @ $4,000 each	= $160,000
23 DF printers @ $4,000 each	= 92,000
appx 2,000 letters @ $10 each	= 20,000

Total	$272,000
-------	-----------

Now for those elegant TP dispensers:

7 stalls per bathroom = 7 dispensers @ $15 each	= $105
approximate number of regular bathrooms in V-Hall	= 56

	$5880
for simplicity we'll say S-Hall cost 75% of V =	4410

	$10290
--	---------

I'll leave out the dispensers in Fairchild

Grand total	$282290

It probably isn't a whole lot compared to the cost of UPT, but I'm sure I could stand living with a crappy printer if I knew I stood a snowball's chance in hell of getting a UPT slot. There is also that fiber optic deal with the net, and that lab building they're going to put behind Fairchild. I'm sure all of us would rather see that money go to UPT, instead of teaching geeks what happens when you spill sulfuric acid on yourself.

Hey, another thing, if they wanted to cut down on officers, why don't they make the fourthclass system they way it used to be, to weed out those 4^o who cry at the table and hide in the library during minutes.

MATH 666 - Linen Exchange Mathematics
Graded Review

Workout Directions : Questions 1- 5 are workout problems. Partial credit may be awarded. Show all your work. Question worths are in parentheses.

1. You are an employee working for the Central Linen Exchange Corp. On June 29, 1992 you issue two towels to Cadet X. Granted Cadet X is not dismissed for an honor violation in the intervening time, how many towels should you expect him to turn in three months later?

$$\begin{aligned} t &= \# \text{ of towels} = 2 \\ h &= \text{constant of linen} = 6.4 \\ a &= \text{composite fiber factor} = 0 \\ \theta &= \text{universal constant} = 4.587 \end{aligned}$$

$$x = \frac{5e^{a\theta} h}{t + 4}$$

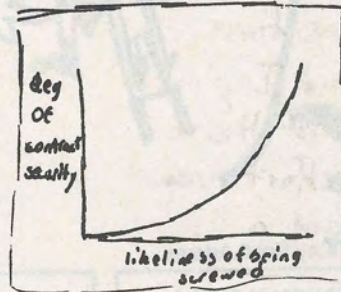

$$x = \frac{5e^{(0)(4.587)} 6.4}{2(4)}$$

$$x = 4$$

4 TOWELS

2. You are the manager of Uniform Linen Inc., a haphazardly run company that stumbled onto a government contract. knowing that a competing firm sell towels of a higher quality for $1.10, how much should you charge for yours? (HINT : Use the ramjam curve of government economics to help justify your answer.)

The ramjam curve says that the more likely you are to secure your contract is, the more likely you are to pay through the nose. As a general rule, the proper rate to charge is slightly less than double the market price. Therefore

$2(1.10) = $2.20$. THE best price to charge is $2.00.

HABET

DODO TAILS

There I was, rancorous and vindictive, walking through Second Group as if I owned the place. I stopped at a CQ desk to make a phone call. The three-smoke looked up nervously from his book, noticed I was far superior to him, and went back to reading. He was licking his lips anxiously, and running his hands through his hair, flipping pages furiously.

I punched the number (dialing is an obsolete term), putting the receiver in the crook of my shoulder.

"Barbie, dammit, get Joe on the horn," I barked, "Yes, he'll know who I am," I waited, looking over the desk at the three degree. He was doing History 220 reading.

"Oh, Agincourt, where the Brits taught the French that the longbow could perforate scale armor...Yeah, good stuff."

He looked up at me, obviously terrified, "How-how do you know?" He looked up and down the hall.

"Just a minute; yeah- Joe, look, I'm sick of the excuses and the whining. Just get back here. No. No! Just get back here. Yeah, I know. Yes. And bring the eggplant, like I told you." I hung up, then turned back to the awaiting sophomore.

"I'm a History Major," I said calmly, looking him dead in the eye.

"N-No," he murmured, slowly backing away, holding his hands in front of his face as if to fend off and attack.

I grinned, "Yes," I continued, "The only Major that means anything: Military History." His eyes glanced around, and lit on the phone. I grabbed it and yanked the cord from the wall before he could reach for it. "The Art of Warfare- Understanding Death." I picked up the three-hole punch, the heaviest thing I could spot on the desk.

"You do not understand!" I swung the tool down onto the plastic lamination of the CQ counter, smashing it into shards of formica. "We are the experts! We are the heirs of combat!" I swung the punch repeatedly, crushing anything it came in contact with. "Only we can learn of warfare, but we will be the last to get there! None will fly! None will fight! We have been spurned our birthright!!"

The CQ was crying now, tears lining his face, snot dribbling from his nostrils. He was shaking his head in despair, pulling at the roots of his hair. He kept babbling about "fuzzy majors" and how cadets are "nice to them".

"Nice?! Nice!! Are you stoned?!" I looked up and saw the new laser printer sitting off to the side. "Is this a bribe? A way to appease the 'crazy fuzzies'?!!" I grasped the printer, one hand on each end, and lifted it high above my head.

Struggling with the effort, I spat, "Did J.F.C. Fuller have an HP Laserjet? Did Mahan?"

Sweat poured down my neck, soaking my back, as the threesmoke whispered, "Who? What?"

"AAARRRGHH!!" I screamed in rage and frustration as I heaved the infernal device into the mirrors. They shattered with a pleasing crash, and there was the tintinabulation of glass landing on the hard carpet of the hallway.

"Realize the Deathmongers, you worm. Accept the Lords of Destruction as your superiors," I intoned from between clenched teeth. Then I turned and walked away, leaving the CQ on his hands and knees, weeping while trying to clean up the shattered pieces with his bloody fingers, and some sort of ooze leaking from his left ear.
