APRIL 1993
(MARCH, TOO, SORRY)
VOLUME 37, NUMBER 8

Everything must stop immediately. There are strange and terrible changes being implemented here. I have waited three monotonous years to here "1", "9", "9", "3" being reported in by the Group Commanders at each formation. Now, it seems as if we have been deceiving all those tourists up on the Chapel Wall, and are therefore lying to the very public that pays our bills. Oh, come on, like the Honor Code was designed to prevent us from being proud of an obsolete, useless tradition that was even made fun of at West Point before the Civil War. I mean, if training freshmen at the tables is outdated and we are changing to meet the modern needs of the military, why do we practice a style of troop movement that hasn't been employed since the eighteenth century at every meal? As if keeping cadence with D & B's clickety-stix will somehow transfer to a tight formation of aircraft. But not being able to report our class year for Honor reasons? What? Who? Which? I can't- I just don't see it. Who was being lied to? And who was actually keeping track? Didn't they find it peculiar that Fourth Group always had three times as many cadets missing as First?

I mean- I just- well, I- I, I....AAAARRRGGGGHHHHHHH!!!
Has the Math Department taken over CW?

Speaking of which, let me quickly fire off a note to Captain Bloom, esteemed Engineering 410 Course Director: Sir, with all due respect, how come my section with 18 Fuzzies and 3 Techies has to build the hovercraft for the disabled child, while the section with all EE dorks builds a cabinet? And how are we supposed to produce a working version of a machine which in the civilian world costs $18,000 with only a Ben Franklin and some "AOG funds". The point is to teach us how to work with contractors in the Real Air Force, right? So shouldn't we be the Government Representatives, and the instructors be the civilians, and do all the work, and meet OUR deadlines? That would be more realistic wouldn't it? Or, if we HAVE to be the contractors, shouldn't we have the option of taking anything we don't understand (the thing) and farming the job out to some sub-contractor for slave wages, and charge the government four times what it really costs? Hey, maybe "Sixty Minutes" would even do and expose on us! One last thing- I joined the military to kill people and break things, not assist kids, no matter how needy... Why can't we contract for Plasma Laser Weapons or Kinetic Kill Devices or something along the lines of our profession? Sure, the GT might not do an article about us, but think of the practical applications...

Well, now that I'm half-way through the damn column, let me just say Welcome Back from Spring Break. I, myself, went to the Grand Canyon, L.A., Vegas, and Woody Creek. It was like most of my vacations, except this time the man in the iguana costume only took five dollar bills, and the dwarf with the rolling pin thought the Hilary Clinton marionettes were so he could play with the basset hounds without actually getting mayonaise on his hands. And I didn't even know you could do THAT with a ukelele.

Wow. The planes are changing. I get confused when walking from Sijan to Vandy now, lost without the 104 to guide me. Why an Eagle? Why not something with some personality, some charisma, like say, a Sherpa? Will upperclassmen now change their mythical lies to future generations of smacks about Sijan's legendary exploits in the F-15?

Speaking of smacks, they've been recognized since last issue. Hey, congratulations. You didn't ---- up like '94.

TOP TEN THINGS YOU SHOULD NEVER SAY
TO YOUR T-41 CHECKRIDE IP

- 10) I hold the school record for the fastest pre-flight.
- 9) Yep, 6 hours between the bottle and the throttle.
- 8) Are those real wings?
- 7) My dad is a Thunderbird, so this is just a formality.
- 6) So what if I didn't calculate your flight bag in my weight and balance, just throw it in the back.
- 5) It amazes me how often ATC is wrong.
- 4) Hey, guess how many CWO geeks it takes to screw in a lightbulb.
- 3) I wish I hadn't drank all that cough syrup this morning.
- 2) Checklist, Schmecklist.
- 1) When I think about you

DODO TAILS

A psychiatric analysis can be an intimidating experience. But, if approached properly, it can be a lot of fun.

When you first enter the office of the shrink (it will invariably have some dippy poster with a kitten in a basket saying something like "I hate Mondays") you will be greeted by a friendly receptionist who is there to put you at ease. Don't buy the act. This is to get you to relax so you will say things that will make you look like Manson's third-grade teacher. Yelling something at the receptionist like, "I have an itch!" will usually get her to back off.

They will want you to fill out a questionnaire that reads like the more obscure passages of a "Rush" album. For instance, they asked me how I would describe my mother. I put "Mom". For my father, I wasn't nearly as creative, and wrote "Dad". Then there was a section entitled "Psychosexual History". Now, I'm a History major, and I wasn't aware of this particular area of study, or I guarantee you I wouldn't have declared "Military" instead. There was the question: "How do you approach your sexual relationships?" and a list following with: Aggressive, Seductive, Passive, Shy, Manipulative. I circled three of the five and wrote "Hey, whatever works" below it. Besides, shouldn't they have a choice of "Clueless" for KAFA Staff? There were also the questions regarding my personal views on ~~_____~~ and pregnancy, to which I responded "whatever gets you through the night" and "I would rather not be".

So then I got to meet the shrink, who is undoubtedly the most disarmingly warm man I have ever seen outside of those Saddam Hussein videos of him petting children. I was initially worried about discussing certain things with him that I thought he might not understand; for instance, the Pod People in my window runners, but he said he had a dozen in his swimming pool, so everything worked out. He asked me if I heard voices telling me to do things I didn't want to do, and my first response was to snap "I'm at the ----ing Academy, idiot" but changed my mind and whispered "Only the one that says 'Kill the Doctor, Kill him'" instead.

Then he ran some mental tests to see if all my muffins were done baking. He asked me the date, and didn't let me check my watch, and the year, and my full name, and some other tough questions. Then he got more complex and asked me to name the past five American Presidents, starting with the one currently in office. I got Billary right off, and worked all the way back to Nixon before I realized I had skipped the entire Carter administration. ^{Said} Hey that was ok because everyone did that. I did all right on the rest of the tests except for the one where I had to subtract seven from 100 and keep going. First I got stuck on 93 and jumped on his desk screaming "Proud to Be, Proud to Be!" until he hit me with one of his framed diplomas; then I just couldn't get past 72 without a paper and pencil. He asked what my major was and then understood and apologized for asking a calculus problem.

When all was said and done, he gave me a clean bill of mental health (which, as I'm sure you're aware, both Bundy and Oswald received on their psychoanalyses) and sent me on my way. I was so excited I called my folks to tell them the good news, but they made me go back again so the doctor could be sure.

Remember, have fun with it, and don't be afraid to drop a few of your friends' names like "Elvis" and "Legion". It will make their day, and you can feel better about yourself.
